So I want to be sure that my disk is not a corrupt one. I'm using a Windows 7 OS and accessing it through a virtual desktop on top of Windows 10. Any help would be greatly appreciated. A: There are a few issues with what you have shown, but the most important one is that your Host Name is not being sent, and you don't know the remote IP address. There are a few hosts that are trusted by default for your home IP address. You can list trusted hosts using the command line in Windows: C:>nslookup 172.31.71.10.10.10.10 As you can see, I have two IP addresses from Google's public DNS. Your home IP address is likely in the 172.31.71.0/24 range. The command nslookup -n %env:computername should return the remote IP address for your system. In addition, you seem to have the Servers section linked to the Network Configuration Server (a remote server). You'll likely need to follow the instructions in this question to give yourself access to the current server. $2 + 2^p + 1$. Give $5^t(i) + 6^x(i)$. $-i^*2 + 2^i + 1$ Let $s(d) = -d$.
