Recently, though, SpaceX and Lockheed Martin have announced plans for a more powerful engine, starting with the Raptor engine. Like the Ariane 5, the Raptor engine will be an expendable, for-profit launch vehicle that can replace the Falcon 9. The Raptor engine will also likely be the main engine of the Dragon 2, Elon Musk's new manned spacecraft to Mars. But that's where the similarities end. The Raptor engine is designed as a first-stage booster engine for the Super Heavy booster that will be used to send humans to Mars. But its focus is on liquid hydrogen, while the Cheetah is designed for liquid oxygen. Rockets are the only viable way to send humans beyond the Earth, but the vast majority of rockets we've used up to now have been solid-fueled. That's a serious problem, because liquid hydrogen is extremely dangerous and rocket engine performance is directly linked to the amount of supercold nitrogen tetroxide (NTO) in the fuel. Solid fuel and solid-fueled rockets are the main source of pollution in space. "The solid-fueled rocket engine has been the engine of choice for more than 50 years, and it's helped us go from the moon to the International Space Station,
