The third installment of the Predator franchise to take place in deep space, Predators came out of the big initial screening at the VFX Supervisor's Guild of America in LA with strong praise! The film-makers have come up with a very successful marketing approach that really gets the fans excited. This includes the website that officially runs in parallel with the release of the movie and showcases the movie's amazing visual effects work. As part of the release of the trailer the producers invite fans to vote for their favorite Predator. This should really hit home the fact that they are releasing a different Predator on the big screen for each of the five Predators. While it's a different Predator, you can expect to see a lot of familiar Predator elements from the previous film. I am not sure if this will be a reboot of the series or a continuation, but it is very exciting to see the marketing behind the new film. The previous Predator film came out in 2011 and was a box office failure with only $37 million in the U.S. The new film coming out this summer has already exceeded $170 million and will make more in it's first weekend alone. Stay tuned for more reviews and I'll be back with more Predator coverage and the latest news and reviews of the new film! Well, that's certainly not the case in the beauty world. Brands take flack for not offering great customer service. We can't live in a bubble where we think we know what the customer wants. We have to listen and learn from them. Learn from your product complaints, from the Twitter and Facebook posts where you're yelled at or have to laugh to keep from crying. From making sure your face looks clean and healthy to knowing exactly how much lotion to get and where, more brands are scrambling to realize that the way we're doing things doesn't work. We've learned a few things at Jenny Lind. We listen to what you have to say, we make changes and we appreciate you. So when you visit and when we email you, let's make it work.
