Q: Site using razor in mvc and javascript is there any way to include javascript in site that is using razor in mvc? now i have to download domready.js every time i include javascript in a razor view but i want to be able to use that js once, so it is possible to include it? A: If you don't want to include all javascripts, I would suggest to only include what you really need - a script file for instance. The approach would be that you create separate.js files in one of your project folders and then reference them in your razor view. If you don't like this approach, I'm sorry, I don't know of any other way.

Q: Avoiding slow numpy scripts I read an article on smart numpy scripts, it mention that a script with looping can often be made much faster with vectorized numpy functions. I am interested in making a for loop and numpy functions: Is there any study on a group of such for-loop/numPy functions to see if they will be very fast. For example, I want to compute the values: for i in range(n): for j in range(n): array[i][j] = a(i,j) * b(i,j) Is there any fast way to make this computations in numpy? If it is too hard to think of a safe way, perhaps it is possible to convert to a linalg.matrix multiplication, but I don't know if this is correct. A: If your typical loop will be just loops over the rows and columns, then you can use a very generalizable method. We can construct a matrix of the multiplication over the outer dimension. Then
